

Dermatoscopic differentiation of dermal nevus and seborrheic keratosis

Dr. Carolina Diamandis<sup>1</sup>, Alexander Davis<sup>1</sup>, and David Seideman<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Affiliation not available

May 11, 2021

Abstract

The majority of seborrheic keratoses can be reliably differentiated clinically from a melanocytic nevus. In case of difficult findings, for example at unusual localization, dermatoscopy is the key method for diagnosis. In the near future, developments in artificial intelligence (A.I.) might help to classify the findings. Initial results from studies are promising in this regard.

Hosted file

Derm seborrheic keratosis - 2021 1-3.pdf available at <https://authorea.com/users/410930/articles/521647-dermatoscopic-differentiation-of-dermal-nevus-and-seborrheic-keratosis>