Cardiac resynchronization therapy in a patient with noncompaction of ventricular myocardium: a case report

Juan Wang¹, Dasheng Lu², Yunong Han², and Hongxiang zhang²

¹ Affiliated Hospital of Wannan Medical College, Wuhu, China

² Affiliated Hospital of Wannan Medical College, Wuhu, China

June 1, 2021

Abstract

Noncompaction of ventricular myocardium (NVM) is a rare and specific type of congenital cardiomyopathy that occurs in only 0.05% in adults. Cardiac resynchronization therapy (CRT) improves cardiac function and long-term prognosis in patients with heart failure with left bundle branch block, but its efficacy on NVM is uncertain

Hosted file

manu.doc available at <https://authorea.com/users/417261/articles/524436-cardiac-resynchronization-therapy-in-a-patient-with-noncompaction-of-ventricular-myocardium-a-case-report>

Hosted file

Supplementary1.data.doc available at <https://authorea.com/users/417261/articles/524436-cardiac-resynchronization-therapy-in-a-patient-with-noncompaction-of-ventricular-myocardium-a-case-report>