

Deep neonatal Cerebral Sinovenous Thrombosis: an interesting case report with anticoagulant treatment without risk factors

Ludovica Di Francesco¹, Eugenia Maranella², Sandra Di Fabio², and Francesco Chiarelli¹

¹Gabriele d'Annunzio University of Chieti and Pescara

²San Salvatore Hospital

August 17, 2021

Abstract

Cerebral sinovenous thrombosis (CSVT) is an uncommon neurological disease in newborns. Literature data report the association between prothrombotic risk factors and CSVT. This correlation can help the clinician make an earlier diagnosis of this subtle disease. Herein, we describe a severe neonatal CSVT in the absence of significant risk factors.

Hosted file

Manuscript.rtf available at <https://authorea.com/users/430721/articles/534253-deep-neonatal-cerebral-sinovenous-thrombosis-an-interesting-case-report-with-anticoagulant-treatment-without-risk-factors>

Hosted file

Figure.rtf available at <https://authorea.com/users/430721/articles/534253-deep-neonatal-cerebral-sinovenous-thrombosis-an-interesting-case-report-with-anticoagulant-treatment-without-risk-factors>